CLEANSING

Pennsylvania Museum and School of Industrial Art

THE INSTITUTION in the interest of which this entertainment is given is an outgrowth of the great Centennial Exhibition of 1876. From the smallest beginning it has grown to be a power, and has strong claims upon the support of the community. In a great manufacturing center like Philadelphia, at a period when art plays so strong a part in the development of the industries, the importance of such an institution requires no emphasizing.

Its Textile School is the best in the country—for practical commercial purposes ahead of any similar institution in the world. Its Art Department annually furnishes skilled craftsmen and women, fully prepared to carry on their work in their chosen trades, and the Museum is constantly adding to its collection of original objects to serve as models to students and to inspire them with suggestions from the best decorative art that the world has produced.

The School with all its splendid advantages, and an attendance of nearly 1100 pupils, has no Endowment Fund, and is dependent on individual subscription and appropriations from the City and the State.

There are many needs connected with its development that tax these resources beyond their limit, while the growth of the Museum depends entirely upon the intelligent generosity of its friends.

That urgent necessary funds might be provided, it was decided to give

Castle Rock Spring Water

THE SPRING

rises at an altitude of five hundred feet, ten miles west of Philadelphia, in Delaware County, Penna., and owing to its elevation, sewage contamination is impossible.

Its waters flow from the hillside under glass and it has not run dry in the memory of man.

The highwayman, Sandy Flash, so graphically described by Bayard Taylor, hid his spoils in the caves of Castle Rock.

The Fox Hunters of Delaware County all know Castle Rock.

EXTRACT FROM REPORT ON

CASTLE ROCK SPRING WATER

By the Philadelphia Clinical Laboratory:

"From a bacteriological standpoint this water is in excellent condition for drinking purposes.

"Bacilli coli communis NOT found."

The water is being served in quarts or pints, plain, sparkling, vichy or lithia, at the Union League, Philadelphia, Art. Rittenhouse, Downtown, Racquet, Manufacturers and other clubs and is unrivaled for family use.

Originality in Fur Modes

Each garment and fur piece is designed to accentuate the wearer's individuality. Wenger models are not copies, though the elaborate showing of made-up pieces at this shop is of pleasing assistance in selection.

Wenger furs are always worth more than they cost, but prices here are less than what other furriers would consider exceptional value.
